Excerpt: . . . 11 and to seek prevention, response, and reconstitution solutions. The safety of our Nation is of course our first and foremost overriding objective. The Justice Department has been working across govern-ment to address infrastructure issues for several years. However, the attacks of September 11 have heightened our awareness of these issues and created a new sense of urgency. U. S. infrastructure protection efforts are the shared responsi-bility of many entities, both public and private. Many of this joint effort is based upon the principle that a robust exchange of infor-mation about threats to and actual attacks on critical infrastruc-tures is a critical element for successful infrastructure protection. The following, of course, are just a few of the entities that are dedi-cated to this principle: The National Infrastructure Protection Cen-ter, headed up by Mr. Dick; the Department of Justices Computer Crime and Intellectual Property Section, which I oversee; the Infor-mation and Analysis Centers that have been referred to; the Crit-ical Infrastructure Assurance Office, Mr. Tritaks shop; Office of Homeland Security; and the Federal Computer Incident Response Center. To better protect critical infrastructures government and private sector must work together to communicate risks and possible solu-tions. Acquiring information about potential vulnerabilities from the private sector is essential. Doing so better equips us to fix defi-ciencies before attackers can exploit them. For example, a vulner-ability in an air traffic control communication system could allow a cyber attacker to...
