Sugar refining is in the hands of one factory, which supplies almost th6 entire consumption, estimated at over 30,000 tons per annum. This factory, which is at Rosario, I visited; it covers an extensive area, has complete railway connections, deep water frontage (where sea-going vessels discharge), and appears to be thoroughly equipped. The machinery is of diverse origin, having been bought wherever it was deemed most suitable. The principal motors, about 600 horse-power altogether, and boilers (10) are Swiss; a new large vacuum pan is German; new installation for revivifying animal charcoal is English, c. About 800 hands are employed. The factory closes for three months in the summer. Only high-class sugar is produced, and the residual molasses is now sold to distilleries or thrown away, a fine distilling plant of 8,000 litres daily capacity lying idle, as at 76 cents for the spirit there was, it was found, barely a return of cost after paying 60 cents revenue tax. Xo loaves are made, the chief products being tablets and broken lump. I saw the former being packed direct in 20 kilo wooden boxes (present price, $11), the pieces for making which come cut to size, tied in...
